MARGINAL COLUMN By MIRI MINDLIN

I DROPPED into the kindergarten to deliver a message, and found myself eavesdropping. In the course of their daily chat the kindergartners had found that all the children knew that the world was round. "If the world is round," asked, "then where's the end?" "I know," answered a little blonde girl, "the end is where the sky goes down, you know, where the Arabs are." "No," piped in a little boy with glasses, "that's the horizon. Since the world is round there is no end; you just go on and on." A down-to-earth dark-haired girl broke in: "I know, I know! The end of the world is at Metulla!"

EVEN for the children who know that the world does not end at Metulla, there is a slight shock in store later on in another. One day the large, detailed map of Israel is taken off the wall and a map of the Middle East or of the world is hung up instead. The large Israel, taller than they themselves, with which they have been dealing for a number of years, has shrunk to a pinpoint. And yet the progression is natural, and for the rest of most of their lives, they will be living within the terms and the confines of the big map of the little country, not the other way around. And so do most other people.

TAKING two jumps further in the academic scale, a conversation with an acquaintance who was an undergraduate student comes to mind. He was searching for a subject for a thesis, and was playing with a rather fruitful notion. This would be an examination of the international role of small states and the possibility of their having independent foreign policies. One friend thought of their own small states that had precipitated world crises when their problems had been dangerously ignored by the great powers, from the pre-World War I Balkans and their Sarajevo, to our own Suez campaign. Then there was the odd but not encouraging example of small countries whose empires dropped away, such as Portugal and Holland, or a more recent creation such as Belgium. Or the disappearance of others, such as the Baltic states. The more one looked at the problem, the clearer it seemed that the tall might give the dog a jerk, but couldn't swing him for any length of time; in the long run, the survival or otherwise of small states tended to be a function of the concerns and tensions of the great powers. However, within in those very narrow limits (to twitch or not to twitch the tail) a foreign policy is possible.

DOES that mean that great power concerns of more general relevance should be ignored by the inhabitants of small states? Only recently, a thoughtful acquaintance expressed dismay at the total lack of interest here in the dangers of atomic warfare, and the lack of understanding of it was tended to be a function of the concerns and tensions of the great powers. However, within in those very narrow limits (to twitch or not to twitch the tail) a foreign policy is possible.

DOES that mean that we only just read of the 400 per cent increase in radioactivity over some parts of Europe, and Europe wasn't that far away. We were involved when these issues arose in the U.N. General Assembly, and it took an informed public to appreciate the decisions taken by our delegations. But quite aside from these occasions, this was an issue of obviously world-wide import, and if we could really do nothing about it since we didn't belong to the nuclear club, an understanding of it was necessary because the issue did affect us ultimately. And while we were understandably more intimately preoccupied with the threats of a "neighbourly" use of more conventional weapons, this was a problem not to be casually brushed aside out of our consciousness — for one day it would catch up with us.

IF foreign policy and successions had their own separate existence within the "proper study" of small states? Perhaps a kind of answer could be found in Edmund Wilson's remarks at the very end of his latest book, "A Piece of My Mind: Reflections at Sixty." After describing his feeling of increasing alienation from the contemporary scene, he goes on to add and answer again: "I think in a moment of the past? I do not necessarily believe it. I may find myself here at the centre of things — since the centre can be only in one's head — and my feelings and thoughts may be shared by many." Like the little boy with the glasses in the kindergarten mentioned above, discovering infinity.

Britain, U.S. Confer On M-E Problems

GATTYSBURG (Reuter). — The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, and U.S. Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Christian Herter, on Sunday discussed the Middle East situation.

The three-hour meeting was also attended by Sir Roderick Rumbold and Sir Patrick Dunn, of the British Foreign Office, and by Mr. William Rowntree, Assistant Secretary of State for North Eastern Affairs, and Mr. Frederick Jinhard, Counsellor at the State Department.

The White House spokesman, Mr. James Hagerty, said there was "just a general discussion of the Middle East." Asked about the discussions between the British and the U.S. leaders, Mr. Hagerty said: "I would say one word, and that would be fine."

President Eisenhower and Premier Macmillan, who virtually wound up their talks on Saturday evening, attended a church service at Bethesda, Maryland, on Sunday morning and were later expected to drive back to Washington after their Cannon Ball discussions.

On Monday Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Lloyd will confer at the British Embassy with Mr. Douglas Dillon, the State Department's top economic expert, Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson, and Secretary of Commerce Lewis Strauss.

A British spokesman said the purpose of this meeting would be to review the economic situation of the free world as a whole in face of the economic drive by the Communist powers.

It was assumed that Mr. Macmillan will also meet with President Eisenhower again on Monday to say good-bye before returning to London the following day.

Nkrumah Lashed For Incitement

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia (Reuter). — Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the Rhodesian Federation, on Sunday accused Premier Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana of assiduously stimulating an African nationalist movement among the black population, and then inciting violence and death.

Sir Roy was replying in a statement published in the Salisbury "Sunday Mail" to the Ghanaian Premier's remarks in Parliament on Saturday night.

The decision is believed to have followed a proposal by Mr. Reuben Barkatt, head of the Labour Federation's Political Department, who disclosed last week that African countries had recommended closer contact with the Hizbutar.

It will be impossible to comply with these requests without establishing a suitable liaison centre abroad, he added.

Details Soon

Sir Roy said that those ignorant of the causes of the recent disturbances in the Federation should await publication of the details which will take place shortly.

He said Dr. Nkrumah should himself relate how effective his actions have been in removing from Ghana without recourse to promises of democracy those who have opposed him. "He might explain to 40 M.P.'s jailed because they did not see eye to eye with him why he considers that they should remain in jail indefinitely while he pleads the cause of others in other parts of the Commonwealth," he added.

A-Fallout Reaches Earth More Quickly

WASHINGTON. — New measurements made by the Defense Department and the Atomic Energy Commission have revealed that nuclear fallout reaches earth much more quickly than previously believed.

U.S. scientists had thought that radioactivity in the atmosphere had a life of seven years. But papers released Saturday showed the department had revised its estimate to two years, while the AEC's new estimate was four years.

USAF Fires Second Thor Within Day

CAPE CANAVERAL (Reuter). — The U.S. Air Force on Saturday night blasted aloft the second Thor rocket to be launched from here in the last 20 hours.

The launching was a long-range test for this intermediate range missile, and followed a nose cone recovery test firing early Friday morning.

Ships near Ascension Island, 5,000 miles away, searched without apparent success for the nose cone, nuclear warhead which the morning test had sent into space.

100 Peronistas
Receive Amnesty

Buenos Aires (UPI). — Nearly 100 Army officers loyal to ex-President Juan Peron, who have participated in sundry revolts, have been granted amnesty, Minister of Interior Alfredo Vito revealed Sunday.

They include Generals Tanco, Lugand and Embriko Embriko and Capt. Alejandro Phillippeaux, who led the revolt in Santa Rosa in 1958.

Dag Goes to Kabul

SRINAGAR, Kashmir (APF). — The U.N. Secretary-General, Mr. Dag Hammarskjold, has left here for Kabul, capital of Afghanistan, continuing his tour in Asia.

Spiritual Head of Tibet Placed Under House Arrest

NEW DELHI (UPI). — Reports reaching here on Sunday said that the Dalai Lama, spiritual leader of Tibet, had been placed under house arrest at his winter palace by the Chinese Communist authorities.

The Darjeeling correspondent of the Indian newspaper, "The Statesman" said that the Tibetan uprising had been touched off by Chinese insistence that the Dalai Lama attend a dinner unescorted. Tibetans demonstrated against this breach of protocol, said the newspaper, and then seized the Dalai Lama to refuse the invitation, which he did. Some Tibetans then raided arsenals, took quantities of arms, and began the uprising.

A report from Calcutta said that the rising had spread to Gyantse, in Central Tibet, and that all telegraphic communication with the country was cut off on Sunday night.

India Worried

Informants here said that the Indian Government was gravely concerned over events in Tibet, but would not interfere unless India were directly affected.

The sources said that the Indian Ministry of External Affairs is getting a garbled version of Tibetan events and is trying for an accurate report through diplomatic channels.

Communist Chinese and Russian diplomatic sources here said privately that the revolt is a "temporary phase" and will soon be quelled.

Two top members of the Tibetan War Council have reportedly smuggled themselves out of Tibet to seek Indian support in their struggle for independence.

University Research Snagged By Economy Cuts in Budget

By SHALOM COHEN, Jerusalem Post Reporter

A large part of the research at the Hebrew University cannot proceed because of the lack of equipment due to economy cuts in the 1959-60 allocations, University academic circles told The Jerusalem Post on Sunday.

Medical School Names Professors

The Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School announced the appointment of Professor Ludvik Fleck as Visiting Professor of Bacteriology, and of Professor Theodore Koppany as Visiting Professor of Pharmacology.

Professor Fleck was born in Lwow, Poland, where he also received his medical education. After spending the war years in a concentration camp, he was appointed Professor of Microbiology at the University of Lublin. In 1948 he was elected a member of the Polish Academy of Science. He immigrated to Israel last year and joined the staff of the Biological Institute at Ness Ziona.

Professor Koppany is a native of Hungary and a graduate of the University of Szeged. Since 1951 he has served as Professor of Pharmacology and head of the Department of Pharmacology at Georgetown University, Washington, D.C. He recently came to this country on a Fulbright grant.

Also pending action of the Board of Governors is the merger of the Tel Aviv School of Law and Economics with the parallel faculties of the University.

The meeting of the Board, to be attended by a large number of Governors from Israel and abroad, will last three days and will be presided over by Dr. George S. Wise, its Chairman.

NEUROLOGY LAB

LYDDA AIRPORT. — The sum of $10,000 will be made available to acquire equipment for the laboratory of experimental neurology at the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School, Dr. E. Weisz, Deputy Chairman of the University's Board of Governors, stated here on Sunday.

MR. Macmillan seems to have done better in Washington than most observers predicted. From his ten-day trip

TOWARDS to Soviet Russia and A SUMMIT his long talks with Mr. Khrushchev he brought some basic ideas: first, the Soviet leader is ready to enter into serious negotiations with the West, before burning the bridges over the Berlin question; second, there is not much use in talking with any Soviet officials other than Mr.

Khrushchev himself and therefore a summit conference is unavoidable; and third, the case for disengagement in Central Europe, through the creation of a zone of limited conventional and nuclear armaments, interests Soviet Russia and therefore offers a way out of the present deadlock.

On the first two points Mr. Macmillan appears to have obtained the agreement of President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles. On the third there is also a narrowing of the gap between differing points of view. Mr. Khrushchev eased the task which faced the British Prime Minister by accepting in advance the Western proposal for a Foreign Ministers' meeting on Germany on May 11.

As Mr. Khrushchev's opposition to Foreign Ministers' meeting had previously been quite vocal, this new statement constituted an important concession which President Eisenhower could only match by another concession: the acceptance of a summit conference for this summer, whatever the results of the Foreign Ministers' meeting may be. The movement Mr. Khrushchev seemed to mean business; there was no longer any reason to attach too many conditions to the summit meeting, as President Eisenhower has repeatedly done in the past. It may also be that Mr. Dulles would prefer the summit meeting to be held in a few months rather than at a later date. He may indeed this summer attend either in his capacity as Secretary of State, or as a powerful adviser to the President, while nothing can be foreseen about his participation at some later date.

It is also known that neither General de Gaulle nor Chancellor Adenauer is particularly opposed to a summit meeting. Though they would prefer to see it well prepared in advance, no opposition may therefore be expected to stem from either of these quarters.

There is certainly a much smaller degree of agreement on Mr. Macmillan's third proposal: the creation of a zone of limited armaments in Central Europe.
One must nevertheless bear in mind that even on this point considerable conciliation seems to have been achieved in the past fortnight, since the Moscow communiqué which appeared to endorse the main features of the hitherto-rejected Rapacki plan. Indeed, it now looks as though Mr. Macmillan is proposing, at least at this early stage, not the creation of a denuclearized and demilitarized zone in Central Europe — not even a zone with reduced nuclear and conventional armaments — but simply the freezing in this zone of the West's and East's armaments at their present levels, with adequate controls. But even so, Washington is not ready to display a willingness to start on the road which may lead towards the demilitarization of Central Europe without knowing beforehand what political concessions Soviet Russia is ready to make in return, regarding both the future status of Berlin and Germany's ultimate reunification.

So after all, Mr. Mac-millan's diplomatic globetrotting was not in vain, and he returns home with heightened stature. He has not solved any of the problems, but he has deprived them, at least partly, of their explosive character and brought them back to the place where they belong: to the green baize of the negotiation table. In the dangerous age in which we live this in itself is no small achievement.

Hawaii Becomes 50th State

THE admission of the 50th State into the American Union was — except in Hawaii — taken as calmly as if such increases were routine. The precedent of Alaska made it almost inevitable. Yet Hawaii, more than 2,000 miles away across the Pacific, will be far the last state of the union and its admission is a colonial step towards racial toleration.

Hawaii has been hammering at America's gates since 1903. It consists of some 20 islands, eight of which are inhabited. Its history is a melancholy one and does not fit its rich green valleys, its sun-dappled slopes, its monolithic steeples in, or its sculptured mountains which make it one of the loveliest and sweetest places on earth. It was discovered in 1778 by Captain Cook who first called it the Sandwich Islands — the "Fifth Month" of the Admiralty. Cook was killed in an insignificant skirmish on one of the beaches.

British and European sailors, deserters and pirates took to settling there and brought with them cholera, measles, smallpox, typhus and alcoholism. Two British sailors became advisors to King Kamahameha I who united the islands by conquest and founded a monarchy. Before him, the islanders, originally cannibal, had been ruled by a tyrannical and feudal caste of priests and aristocrats. Under the new kings, the Hawaiians looked on Britain as their cultural mentor and disinterested friend. In token of this, they inserted the Union Jack in their flag, where it still remains.

Protestant Missionaries

In 1820, American Protestant missionaries from Boston arrived to preach the Word. They seem to have been the least attractive of their sort, narrow, intolerant, greedy and contentious. They disapproved of Peter Damien, the Belgian priest, sainted now, by the Roman Church, who ran a leper colony on Molokai, and they made their disapproval hurt. They became great landowners and founded what are now the chief white families on the island.

In 1834 King Kamehameha I visited England with his wife, but they both died of measles before they saw George IV. The local disputes between the British and the Americans became more bitter. In the end, the King's American adviser, seeking a final solution, advised the King to offer the islands to Britain — in the event of partition, the islands would be refused. This was done and they were refused. From that time on American influence was paramount and, with the help of the curious missionary aristocracy, their American future pattered out, sapped by degeneracy, disease and drinking. Under the leadership of the Spanish-American War, Hawaii was annexed in 1898.

Today half-a-million people live on the islands in a wild assortment of races. Thirty-eight per cent are Japanese.

Great Senators

THE Senate, after some pretty intensive in-fighting, has chosen the five greatest Senators from out of its history. The committee that made the choice was headed by Senator John Kennedy, and it asked the views of 150 historians. The committee made the final decision with a view to contemporary political rather than history and it will be noted that the portly painted and inset in the gilded plasterwork of the Senate Reception Room. The choices are:

Henry Clay, from 1830 to 1852 commanded the floor of the Senate like a brilliant general. Called the "Great Compromiser" because his ability to find a middle way gave the new country 50 years of peace and postponed the Civil War. He was strong enough to survive the shock.

John Calhoun

John Calhoun gave his adopted South the fiercest leadership it has ever known. Clay said of him, "He would

KEEPING POSTED

WE were showing some tourist friends from England around and took them to the Knesset. Very nice, they said, very nice. As an afterthought they observed that the House of Commons was also in rather a noisy place. The new Knesset would command a better situation, we added. And these guards with the curious Scottish tam-o'-shanters? Had they perhaps been the High Commissioner's bodyguard under the Mandate, or something like that? Rather testily we said no. The last High Commissioner took his guards back home with

WE have another letter from a correspondent which raises a problem. In a neat little package he sends all the relative documents and we have no reason to doubt their accuracy. Some time ago, it seems, he needed a spare part for his electric razor. He discovered that the item would cost $6.00, and applied for a post in the Corporation's symphony orchestra but there ent? Writes to relatives to ask them to buy the thing for him? Get blackmarket money at a third of the rate?

Grow a beard.

A JERUSALEM musician, Mr. Arieh Sacks, reports that he has had to turn down a request by the Musical Director of the South African Broadcasting Corporation to find a middle-aged player whom they wish to engage. The man has applied for a post in the Corporation's symphony orchestra but there is nobody in Beirut, where he lives, whom they wish to ask for an opinion on his playing. The Musical Director writes, "He tells us that he is not allowed into Israel but could go to the Arab part of Jerusalem... would you be able to contact this audience?" The letter ends on a friendly note, "Did we not play the Haydn Concerto together in Jerusalem in 1937? It was then an R.A.F. pilot; if so, I have very happy memories of that performance."

Today's contributors include J.S. and R. Alroy, Jerusalem.

him. The tourist's wife sought to pacify us. It must be difficult designing new uniforms. If the Tower of London need a new guard, they probably wouldn't try anything like the Beefeaters. It was so much simpler if you had some traditional get-up and could make use of that. She turned to her husband. "What did they call these orthodox men with the tall hats and the white stockings?" we said. "Orthodox?" That was always being difficult! "The Neturel Kart?" Didn't that mean "Guardians of the Wall"? "Wouldn't it solve a lot of difficulties if we gave them all good jobs watching the Knesset, and the cousin was their own traditional uniform and look simply splendid and nobody would think that they were left over from any other government?" We told her we thought it was an excellent idea, though there might be some technical difficulties.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

Now that the Israel Consulate for a chain-shop has been recognized by the Hebrew Language Academy (or rather slimy grounds, as I consider), and we are to have Hebrew conditor, or pastry-cook, and condit for cakes, presumably we shall also have to accept. Conditor as the Anglo-Saxon word is in common enough in any case. Obviously, the man who works
